Home to a number of craft breweries, cideries, and wineries, Saugatuck/Douglas is a must-visit destination for adult beverage connoisseurs to raise a glass, make a toast, and quench your thirst.

There's an artistry involved in crafting the kind of flavorful beers, small-batch ciders, world-class wines, and artisan spirits that make this area a flourishing craft beverage scene.

And the very nature of what makes this area so appealing to visitors is also what makes it the perfect location for crafting distinctive drinks. Our unique terrain and climate yield optimal growing conditions for the regional crops essential to the flavor profiles of the beverages produced here.

Small Brewers Lead to Big Flavors

Celebrate the American craft beer culture with a visit to our craft breweries, where passion and creativity combine for spectacular results.

What is an American craft brewer? The Brewers Association defines it as small (has an annual production of 6 million barrels of beer or less) and independent (less than 25% of the brewery is owned or controlled by a beverage alcohol industry member that is a non-craft brewer).

But ask any craft brewer, and they'll tell you the distinction means something even more. Craft breweries are known for using traditional ingredients but also pushing the boundaries to create unique flavor profiles. They also have greater control over their brewing processes and know that better ingredients yield better results. So, go ahead and grab a pint or two at each of our craft breweries and get ready to try some uncommonly flavorful beers.

Straight from the Source

An American Viticultural Area (AVA)

is a designated wine grape growing region in the United States that is distinguished by its geographic features. Wine connoisseurs have discovered that the Fennville AVA, part of Michigan's Fruit Belt region, is ideal for growing wine grapes. A longer growing season—thanks to the lake-effect climate—and sandy, neutral soil results in wines that are very fruit-forward in flavor.

The Fennville AVA, established in 1981, was the 3rd recognized AVA in the U.S. and the 1st in Michigan.

Featuring small-batch expertise and artistry, our local wineries produce award-winning wines from estate-grown and locally-harvested grapes that flourish here. Receiving increased national recognition for their quality, Southwest Michigan wines are among the best the state has to offer.
